A new bridge has been installed to replace one destroyed earlier this year at Bridal Veil Falls. The original bridge was demolished by an avalanche, the biggest one in that area since at least 1953, resort official Dave Grow said. "The new bridge came to us in one piece, 12 feet wide and 60 feet long, from a bridge factory in Alexandria, Minnesota," Grow said. The bridge cost $20,000. Half has been donated by the Scenic Canyon Society. Also new at Bridal Veil will be a snack bar based in a caboose donated by Union Pacific Railroad. Provo Canyon once was a busy railroad route, Grow said. One stop in the canyon was by the falls, and people would take the train up to hike and see the falls. The caboose is being converted to a snack bar, which will be open by this weekend. Full operation of the facility probably will be in two weeks.
